Course Overview

This Summit aims to give Participants insights in the workings of the Labour Laws currently in place with a view to protect the interests of both employers and employees and in the process safeguard the political, economic and social well-being of the whole society. Human Resource professionals have to deal with labour laws all the time. They are the first line of defense as well as offence when it comes to labour and employment laws. Lawyers get involved much later when there is limited room for maneuvers. In reality, Human Resource Managers decide the destiny of most labour and employment law disputes as well as compliance, strategy, procedures and documentation. Legal complications have been increasing manifold in recent times when it comes to labour and employment as well as industrial laws that managers are tasked to; enforce, comply with and keep record of. The managers are key players in case of disputes as well, as they are responsible for building up the case or defense and assist lawyers in case of dispute
